CAR BOOT SALE

Our small community showed up, not only to support our stall holders but also to purchase, which was great to see.

The purpose for having this event was to help raise funds for ongoing community projects.

My thanks goes to all the people who helped in setting up, staying the journey and for the clean up.

together we can do much."*

Redesdale Event CAR BOOT SALE

Thank you to stallholders and supporters from the community and surrounds.

It is said a Catholic Priest named Father Harry Clark from Stockport first introduced 'The Car Boot Sale' to the UK as a charity fundraiser, after seeing a similar event in Canada whilst he was on holiday there in the early 1970s. Now, they are quite the popular event here in Australia. Due to the 'Redesdale Bush Market' being cancelled for the second year, The 'Redesdale Car Boot Sale' was born and was held last Saturday on the Queens Birthday long weekend. Unfortunately the weather was quite the chilling experience for the stall holders, but there was plenty to look at and lots to chat about. We had 13 stalls from our local community and a couple from out of town too, which is exactly how the huge Murrabit country market started in the 1970s.

"From little things ,Big things Grow"

It's a great way to recycle your old stuff quickly and earn some extra pennies while you're at it.

It's also lots of fun - especially if the sun is shining.

Pretty much anything can be sold at a car boot sale, as long as it's not dangerous or illegal and there was plenty to choose from. There were household goods, plants and pots, furniture, books , clothing , toys, sporting items, fire pits, tools and of course the wonderful catering delights from our local gentlemen from the Redesdale Recreational Reserve committee, assisted by the super ladies from the Redesdale and District Association.

Respect, Resilience & Relationships

The past few weeks have been a lot of fun at RMMPS. We have had our tennis coaching continue which the students are loving. The new court has been a catalyst for the way we operate during recess and lunch and the students are very interested in playing tennis and practising their skills that they have learned over the term.

Our two excursions were another highlight, the Melbourne Zoo was a lot of fun for all the students. They enjoyed learning about all the animals and their habitats. This was aligned to the recent incursion we did with Ecolinc, where all students learned about insect lifecycles with Dr. Shasta. They loved drawing and creating a diorama to show their knowledge.

We also were very fortunate to head to Melbourne to see a concert with Baker Boy, an indigenous artist who was very entertaining. The students loved the dancing, singing and dancers and had an absolute blast. Below is a few recount of a student's experience at this incredible production at Hamer Hall.

On Tuesday 7.6.22 I had to wake up at 6:00am! Yes, really. Anyway, we were going to a Baker Boy concert! Again, really.

When we got there, Tyler, Lili and Micaela got lost. When we, or I should say they found us, we all got FREE Baker Boy hats, but I didn't wear mine for the whole thing.

There were already people playing a song when we got on to our seats. I already knew the song, but I forgot the name of it.

I was waiting for what felt like AGES until three MCs got on stage. One of them said, "You see that cord lying on the ground? That's dangerous, Baker Boy could trip on it!" So, he went to get some tape from backstage. When the other two taped the cord down, they accidentally taped his head! As anyone would do, he told them off and did it himself. The other ones kept annoying him so, he taped their heads TOGETHER! (LOL) When they went backstage, I saw the MCs with the tape fall over and the tape broke!

Finally, Baker Boy came on and everyone SCREAMED with happiness! Then, he performed some songs of his that I know. And then, the BEST one, Marryuna! It was sooo fun! We even got to jump up and down and sing along! But soon, we sadly had to leave. But that's not all! We even got FREE boxes of food! We then got to eat at the park and then, we went on the bus back to school. The trip was sooo boring. But when we got to school, we got an early lunch and started working on our recounts. (That's what this is).

Smoke alarms.

The recent fatality figures compiled by the CFA show where and how fire related deaths occur. For all the time and effort we put into preventing and fighting Bushfires, the most common cause of a fatality is being in a bedroom during a house fire.

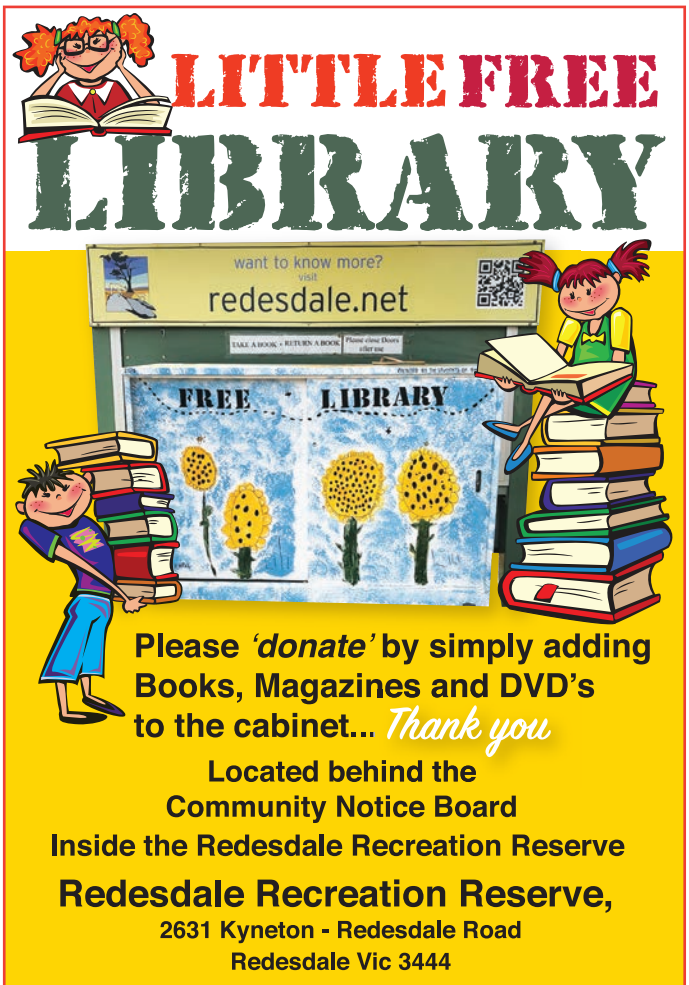

Statistics show that you are 4 times more likely to die in bed with no bedroom smoke alarm fitted than with one. Even the hallway or lounge room smoke alarm may not be enough to wake someone through a closed bedroom door, if they are in a deep sleep or already affected by smoke.

Thankfully due to Lithium battery technology we have smoke alarms that last 10 years. No more "change your clock, change your smoke alarm battery" or having a draw full of 9 volt energizers. Even installation is easier with some brands having self adhesive Velcro tape instead of screws.

The CFA is so invested in getting smoke alarms out there that they have purchased a number to give to members of the community who, for what ever reason, are unable to purchase their own. Installation courses are also offered to CFA members to help those who are unable to fit or even test their smoke alarms.

If you or someone you know need assistance in purchasing or fitting a smoke alarm please contact me on 0428253104. Having a working smoke alarm is good but having one in your bedroom as well is even better.

Regards, Andrew Campbell.

What I Learnt from Knitting my First Jumper

By Tahlia Campbell

When I decided to write about knitting a jumper last year, my wrists immediately started screaming "never again". When I'm knitting or crocheting, I tend to get lost in the pattern and flow. I'll usually have a show on in the background and tell myself I'll knit to the end of it ... then the next episode would play, and I'd have to keep going until that one ended too. While it feels productive to knit for hours, I have ended up with pinched nerves and carpal tunnel because I overworked myself. Because of my fibromyalgia, my body reacts to stress by setting off pain signals, so after a knitting spree I'm exhausted.

Knitting is supposed to be relaxing. And it's fun! It's rewarding to see a pattern form itself in your hands. But it's also a physical activity. I won't go as far as to call it exercise, but the same principle applies; you need to stretch and take breaks, or you'll end up hurting yourself.

This is an area I struggle in. I'm an artist too, so it should be baked into my routine to stretch my wrists and hands often. But because of the way my mind works, I really struggle to remember that. I also carry a lot of stress in my body during what's supposed to be my relaxing hobby. I hold the needles too tight, so then my stitches are too small, making it harder to knit new stitches. It's how I end up with a very tight pain in my elbows, and why my knuckles complain every time I lift a pencil. It also doesn't help that my posture is terrible, and knitting leaves me hunched over my desk.

My knitting skills were put to the test last year when I decided to knit myself an entire jumper (or sweater, for those of you in the US). The pattern I used was Paton's Oversize Jumper, and I knew it would be my most ambitious knitting attempt yet.

Before this, the biggest thing I've crafted by sheer size was a baby blanket as a baby shower gift for my friends. That was certainly time-consuming, but it really came down to a sequence of squares all sewn together. A jumper is a different beast altogether; it has a neckline and sleeves, and the front has to be shorter than the back, and each piece has to line up evenly enough to be a functional piece of clothing! I had a few moments of doubt. Often I worried that I'd get bored and give up halfway through, wasting a lot of time and the money it took to buy the materials. I also worried that my skills would not be up to par and it would turn out a mess.

But I was only making this for myself, and there was no time limit. It didn't matter if I made mistakes, because it'd just end up as something I wear around the house.

Once I got started, I remembered why it took me so long to finish any knitting projects. After a while of working away at the hem, my wrists and upper back started aching, and my shoulders cramped. It took me months to finish it, having to undo and redo steps that I messed up the first time. The more complicated the step, the more frustrated I'd get, and the more I'd clench my jaw and tighten my grip. But bit by bit, the jumper came together, taking shape in my hands. It was an exercise in patience, both to wait for the pattern to be complete, and to stop myself from knitting before my chronic pain flared up again.

When I was finished it was hardly perfect. There was a hole in the neckline where the yarn had stretched; my sewing up was uneven, and the sleeves were far too long. But it was done. Finished is better than perfect, in my mind, and I had something I could be proud of. Not anything I could sell or give as a gift, but a treat I had made for myself that was cozy and kept me warm.

I still have a lot to learn when it comes to managing my chronic pain. I can work away at something for hours and not realise how much pain I'm in until I have to lie down. Doing a big, long-term knitting project like this forces me to take breaks or risk a bad pain day that will take even longer to recover from.

But there's something special about taking real, proper time to finish something. We're so used to having everything at our fingertips now that I find it difficult to do something without immediate results. Working on the one garment over several months was very grounding. I focused on every stitch and felt the clicking of the needles as they tapped together. It was meditative as much as it was hard work. There is value to taking things slow. And there is value in taking care of yourself so that you don't burn out. My chronic pain has made many things difficult, but I won't let it take away the joy of crafting.

Welcome to Redesdale.

Redesdale residents also achieved a town which safe, healthy, well-served, welcoming, secure and safe, and where people of all ages can work and socialise well together. They're great, functional facilities for activities and meetings and easy access to necessary services. (Redesdale Planning 2019)

Redesdale is a small town in Central Victoria, developed from the mid-19th century to service the growing mining and industry. It's famous for the Cobden River to the west and the Campaspe River to the east. Lake Euphrates lies at the northern border.

Like many of the townships in the area it flourished during the gold rush. Some of the old buildings of the area have been restored.

Redesdale Ramblings

Winter Tree Planting

I remember the "Small Towns meeting" when we discussed what we could do to replace the pine trees which used to form an avenue at the entrance to Redesdale from the south. Pinus radiata, the Monterey Pine, is a major part of the Plantation Timber Industry even though it's an endangered plant in its native California. Many trees were suggested but the one that was chosen was a type of "She-Oak" or Casuarina. Fortunately the Bendigo City Council could supply them in quantity from their nursery. Though not as magnificent as the pines the casuarinas are providing a fitting entrance to our town and should last as long if not longer. The popular saying is "the best time to plant a tree is 20 years ago". Simply put, trees take a long time to grow, so get planting now! Winter is an ideal time to get bare-root trees into your garden. "Bare-root" is the term for deciduous trees dug in the winter and sold without soil around the roots. It's important to be prepared for them when they arrive from the nursery. If possible dig over the ground where each tree is to be planted a few weeks earlier to loosen the soil and to make sure you aren't going to hit a rock on planting day. Usually you would be advised to add compost or other amendments to the hole but it really depends where and what you're planting. If you have a prepared bed for other plants into which the new tree will be a central feature then by all means amend away. If however you are putting a tree into a paddock where it will have to contend with the natural soil – don't bother. Filling a planting hole with compost and nice friable mix while the surrounding soil is like concrete in summer will not entice the roots to grow out to help anchor the tree and get its nutrients from beyond the prepared area. In addition with a heavy clay soil any hole full of loose, well-draining media it will fill with water during the rainy periods leading to the rotting of the roots. Planting out an evergreen tree is a different proposition. Evergreens aren't usually bare-rooted because they are generally in active growth year-round while deciduous trees are in a dormant state in winter, making it safe to remove them from the ground to be replanted elsewhere. Planting an evergreen tree from a pot into prepared soil is a possibility where the potting mix is a similar consistency to what you are putting it into. If you are planting out into a very different soil the best thing to do is plant out small plants or tube-stock with a minimal amount of potting mix around the roots so that they can't stay put but have to move out. Deciding on what to plant is made easier if you have a purpose for the tree. Is it to provide shelter for wildlife or domestic stock? Is it to provide colour for your garden? Is it to give shade to an exposed area? Will it block out a view of something you'd prefer not to see? Do you want fruit or flowers? Do you want to make it a feature as a single specimen? It's also important to take into account the tree's eventual size. Some trees described as "dwarf" can reach considerable heights in time. A neighbour of ours in Melbourne planted a 'Little Gem' Magnolia grandiflora in their backyard. It stayed under 3m for a number of years but now is level with the upper storey windows.

One of the benefits of planting trees is that you can grow shade. When we first came here there was very little shade cast by trees because they were mostly quite young. There were some gums and melaleucas but you couldn't grow much under them. With deciduous trees you can get a mulch of fallen leaves which will become an excellent garden soil in time. Into this you can plant a range of plants which like or tolerate shade. A lot of bulbs will grow under deciduous trees and perennials such as hellebores will thrive. For an idea of how the "winter roses" have developed visit Post Office Farm in Ashwood (open on Sundays in winter when they are in bloom) and other perennials can be seen at Lambley Nursery at Ascot (near Ballarat) or Antique Perennials in Kinglake or visit a retail nursery such as The Garden Tap in Kyneton which carries a wide range of interesting plants. Third shutdown of entire V/Line network demands an explanation

Regional train passengers are owed a full explanation after another “communications fault” shutdown the entire V/Line network, cancelling dozens of services during the morning peak.

The disruption left thousands of people travelling from Shepparton, Albury, Traralgon, Bairnsdale, Ballarat, Geelong, Bendigo, Warrnambool and Swan Hill stranded at the platform from 5am today.

It’s the third time in five weeks that the entire network has come to a standstill, but the Andrews Labor Government and V/Line are silent on the true cause of the constant disruptions.

Shadow Minister for Public Transport Steph Ryan said commuters were owed a full explanation.

“Anybody travelling from Victoria’s key regional centres couldn’t get to work today, to critical medical appointments, to business meetings, but all the government offers is a lame excuse that this is a “communications fault”,” Ms Ryan said.

“The only thing regional Victorians want is to know that a train is going to turn up and get us where we need to go.”

The morning’s cancellations will see some services disrupted until 6pm tonight.

Ms Ryan said regional passengers deserve to know exactly what’s wrong with our trains.

“Commuters are realistic, we know there might be delays or cancellations every now and then, but there’s something seriously wrong when the entire network is shutdown three times in just five weeks,” Ms Ryan said.

“We deserve a full explanation on what this ‘communications fault’ is, the risk to commuter safety and why it’s throwing an entire regional train system into shutdown in the 21st Century.

“A change in government in November will deliver a 25 per cent Regional Infrastructure Guarantee for new investment in the regions, including in our rail services, but we’re owed answers long before then.

“The Public Transport Minister needs to step up – today – to tell regional commuters what’s driving these serious disruptions to our trains and when it will be fixed.”
